The History of Slovak Currency

To begin with, we have to mention that various means of payment, which pre-dated coins and the oldest coins struck in the territory of present-day Slovakia, were produced by the Celts in the period from the 3rd to 1st centuries BC. This is followed by a display of Roman, Byzantine and West European (Carolina) means of payment used from the beginning of the Common Era until the 10th century.

Even though the Great Moravian Empire did not mint money of its own, findings of coins of closer and more distant neighbours provide a record of its excellent economic ties. This period is documented by the numerous coin series of small dinars, high-quality silver groschens and the world famous Kremnica florins, later ducats.

The oldest coins were minted manually on a block using a coining die and a hammer, and this method was used up to the 17th century. Gradually, the Kremnica mint introduced machine minting; at first, from 1661, it used a minting rolling machine, and then, from 1710, a minting screw press. From the 19th century, automatic minting machines became a part of the technical equipment of the mint. The turn of the 15th and 16th centuries witnessed the minting of the famous Kremnica guldirers. The origins of the Slovak currency in 1993 are represented by the final version of the Slovak koruna and since 2009 by the introduction of the new European currency - the euro.
